

Foreword

Dear reader,

In recent decades there has been a visible trend towards expanding and deepening international cooperation in the educational and scientific fields, including in legal science. This is due to the rapid development integration processes in the world, expansion of geopolitical, economic, cultural and humanitarian ties, improvement of information and communication technologies.

Issues of international cooperation are becoming more global nature.

The international activities of the Kutafin Moscow state law University (MSAL) are aimed at developing cooperation with the world educational and scientific community in order to increase the competitiveness of the Russian Federation law school in the global educational services market.

Being a highly professional scientific and educational center, the Kutafin Moscow state law University (MSAL) carries out educational and scientific activities at the level of modern of world requirements, forms and develops core competencies of the trainees through continuous innovations in all areas of jurisprudence.

When deciding to publish international issues of our journal, we invite to unite the creative efforts of Russian scientists and our foreign partners in the interests of developing legal science and practice.

This issue presents various views on the current legal situation, its interpretation and application.

I hope that the materials presented will be of interest and inspiration to the readers for scientific research discussions and will be an additional incentive for creative networking of colleagues from different countries.
