

Closing Remarks of the Editor-in-Chief of the Issue

One of the key challenges facing the legal community today is to develop the ability to do more than only to react quickly to rapidly changing social realities, but also to be able to predict the coming fundamental changes. The world is becoming more transparent. Scientists from different countries understand that the tasks they perform in their research have no borders.

Ever increasing importance is given to joint research work between representatives of different states and different law schools, a special role is given to comparative law, which allows choosing the best mechanisms for solving global problems facing humanity.

One of the priority goals of the Kutafin Moscow state law University (MSAL) is to promote international cooperation. The forums and conferences organized annually at our University gather experts from Europe, Asia, Africa and America. Close scientific ties acquired in lively debates on topical issues and supported by cooperation agreements allow the exchange of experiences and ideas not only for the legal experts, but also for students and young scientists from different countries.

Academic mobility programmes for students and teachers are increasingly being developed each year. Thus, during the autumn semester of 2019/2020 academic year more than 30 students of the University were trained in the leading universities in France, Germany, Netherlands, Poland, Turkey and China.

We hope that this issue of the journal, which brings together various views, positions and approaches of our foreign partner universities, will become a tradition and will be interesting for both Russian and foreign readers.

Maria Egorova,
Professor of the Department of Competition Law,
Head of the International Cooperation Department
of The Kutafin Moscow State Law University (MSAL),
Dr. Sci. (Law), Professor